Shooting Down the Stereotypes
By Colt Weber

As it slowly starts to warm up here in the mountains I’m definitely getting excited to hike, backpack, and catch some trout. But, I’m already starting to get excited for the fall hunting seasons as well.

Fall 2017 was a good season for me. I brought down a big pronghorn doe with a single shot at just over 200 yards with my friend Jenna Rodriguez and Outdoor Buddies guides Larry Sanford and Don Murtha in early November.

This was my second pronghorn and the shot was about twice the distance as the one in 2016.

Then in the very last days of November while out with my friend Matt and Outdoor Buddies guides Steve Nichols and Martie Brocko I finally brought down my first elk from only 50 yards away.

Needless to say I’ve been eating well and take quite a bit of joy in skipping the butcher’s counter at the grocery store. With so much good meat readily available I’ve had quite a few dinner guests this winter and spring. I’ve served anything from tacos to stew to chili and so much more. When I tell folks what kind of meat it is the usual question I get is, “How does a blind guy go hunting?”

It’s been nearly six years since I lost my sight and despite hiking hundreds of miles, summiting three 14ers, spending several nights alone miles from the nearest paved surface, pulling several trout out of the rivers and lakes each year, and successfully bringing down large game I constantly run into these kinds of questions.

To me it is so unfortunate that the general public seems to have such low expectations for those of us with the so called “physical disabilities”.

I eagerly await the day when the things that I and others in similar situations have done is considered normal. This is why organizations like Outdoor Buddies are so important.

The more we get out there, the more people learn that adventure is limited not by physical ability but rather limited imagination.

Thanks to the generosity of the donors and the volunteers Outdoor Buddies is enabling people to not only challenge themselves but also alter the world’s perception. Working together we are not just catching fish, hunting game, and making new friends. We are shooting down the stereotypes that have been placed in front of us.
Where’s My Ammo, Dad?
By Greg and Chantel Cresswell

It was a chilly December morning in Fort Collins Colorado as my daughter Chantel and I got ready to go hunt antelope Thanks to Craig Hunter and Outdoor Buddies for the invitation to hunt in this area as we were definitely looking forward to an unforgettable experience. I have to tell you we were a little concerned about the weather. It wasn’t the cold; it was the wind, which meant we would have to hunt more strategically.

As we pulled up to an area where we were to meet up with Larry to sign some waivers Craig was going over some information and instructions we needed for hunting in this area, as we were a little early, and that’s when the first little hiccups hit us. Craig suggested we get a couple of shots off to see where Chantel’s rifle is sighted in. Chantel says “where’s my ammo dad?” I realized I had left the boxes and my range finder in my truck back at the motel 45 minutes away, but thanks to Larry who just happened to have a box of .243 ammo in his truck and humorously let us have them.

Now that we have all of the necessities we headed out. Right away, not 20 minutes into the hunt we came upon a small herd. The wind was blowing pretty hard by now and as we approached them it didn’t take them long to realize that we were a threat and they were gone. So we proceeded up the road to where Craig said there should be more animals. Sure enough we came upon another small herd which would be the first of 4 smalls we made this day.

The terrain was perfect for stalking, there were small rolling hills that would come in handy as cover. Unfamiliar with the vegetation in this area I soon found out the hard way that it had a lot of cacti, so a crawling stalk wouldn’t work for this herd so we tried to get a better position and got spotted. Needless to say they were gone.

It was still early, so we moved on to the next area. We came up on a bluff where I asked Craig to stop so I could just take a look off to the side. Sure enough there were 4 antelope at the bottom and moving to the south so I told Chantel we needed to get ahead of them where we could wait for them. We found a perfect spot in a small void between 2 hills. We peeked over and saw them coming so we got Chantel set up on the sticks and waited a couple of minutes. I was whispering “here they come, take the second one”, not knowing the sticks were a little high and she was struggling to get on the animal.

It was getting tense and I’m not sure what happened but they spotted us and took off. I watched as they ran south over the next hill. Once again we were on to the next.

We followed these last 4 antelope over the hill and got ahead of them surprisingly. With the wind blowing as hard as it was, guessing maybe 20mph with 30mph gusts, the antelope were staying in the valleys so I would credit the wind possibly helping us get in these good positions. As we pulled up to the next hill Chantel and I once again got out to spot where these antelope were. We walked up to the next hill and there they were just walking as if nothing happened. Again we were in a great spot where we could wait for them to come by.

Sure enough here they come, not sure of the yardage, due to forgetting my range finder, but guessing I figure 150 to 175 yards.

Getting set up I wasn’t paying attention to Chantel and her struggles with the tripod I just kept whispering, “Take the second one, take the second one”.

All of a sudden they look right at us and GONE! I thought I might have heard Chantel talk out loud and when I asked her she said yes. Not happy by this point after being on 2 other stalks, I asked why?? You don’t speak out loud on a stalk. She said “the sticks were too high”. After realizing where the problem was, me with my fingers in my ears, I didn’t hear her trying to whisper to me. Another lesson learned, wait for the safety to come off before plugging ears.

After being out there for about five hours and coming across so many antelope I wasn’t concerned any more whether she would get one or not, just when, so we drove back towards the entrance where we came in and started spotting them. It wasn’t long before we saw movement and they were coming towards us. Wow this was great! It gave us time to get set up and in a great position. Chantel was excited, “I’m going to be patient and quiet this time dad” she said. This was the best stalk of the day because we were walking toward them as they came toward us and with the hill giving us cover we walked right in the middle of 3 different groups. Talk about needing to be still and quiet, this was it. As you can imagine with 3 groups of antelope around you one of them was going to spot you and sure enough 2 groups spotted us and took off, the third group got leary and started walking more towards us and Chantel was ready this time. She picked the one she wanted and as she squeezed the trigger they spotted us and yet again GONE! Chantel really felt the excitement with that stalk. She was all smiles and bubbly and couldn’t wait for the next one. As the thought of not shooting an antelope this trip we were still having a great time. We still had a few hours of daylight and the antelope were still around.

We headed back to a water hole that we literally passed 3 times today and as we got closer we saw movement. Craig was telling us to get ready as we got closer. We got to a spot around 200 yards and got out and Chantel got set up just as the herd started getting nervous and walking away. Craig tells us to get in quickly so we could get closer. I was concerned that with the truck moving closer it would speak them but surprisingly it didn’t. Again we got out and Chantel got in position, got lined up on one then she turned and started walking away.

Just about that time 4 others got up from lying down and these were closer, maybe 150 yards. Not knowing if Chantel saw them so I kept saying to her, closer, closer, take the one closer.

Just as she lined up on her she turned toward us. Really? So I told Chantel to punch her in the chest, 2 seconds later BOOM, one doe antelope down. Talk about an exited 12 year old girl, I had one on my hands. “Did I get it, did I get it?” she asked. It ran 20 yards and balled up. Yes you did sweetie. The wind seemed to calm down just long enough for her to take the shot, what a blessing.

What an experience we had that day. I know Chantel will never forget it. The best words that came from her after we had field dressed it and deboned it was “I want to do that again!”

Thanks again Craig Hunter and Larry Sanford with Outdoor Buddies, this was a great hunt!!!

Outdoor Buddies continually strives to increase capacity to assist disabled persons and youth. To do that it takes increased numbers of qualified volunteers to carry out Outdoor Buddies programs. In addition to qualified volunteers, Outdoor Buddies needs additional hunting properties where qualified helper/guides can assist disabled members and youth hunters in their pursuits of outdoor adventure experiences.

If you have interest in being a volunteer please contact Outdoor Buddies Volunteer Coordinator, Steve Medberry, for information on how to get started. You can reach Steve at 720.285.9453 or stevemedberry@gmail.com.

Sight-In at
Green Mill Sportsman’s Club
By Wally Hunt

On Saturday, April 28th perfect weather, excellent expert help and a congenial crowd made for a fun sight-in at the Green Mill Sportsman’s Club. This organization donates two sight-ins per year to Outdoor Buddies to use their excellent facilities, and range officers offering excellent assistance and spotting for our shooters in addition to providing a safe shoot.

This year we had a record 20 shooters and 5 Outdoor Buddies helpers. Coffee, sodas, water, cookies and sweets were provided by Outdoor Buddies and volunteers.

Thanks to the effort of the Green Mill volunteers, they were able to contact David Zetting of Cabela’s and obtain a donation of a $250.00 gift card. These volunteers used this gift card to purchase items from Cabela’s which were prizes given by a drawing to Outdoor Buddies shooters and volunteers. All of them received at least one gift.

This event is the result of the work of Rich Cori and Pete LaBella. These two persons convinced their Board that donating two sight-ins per year to Outdoor Buddies was consistent with their objectives as an organization.

Rich was a member of Green Mill Sportsman’s Club and a member of the Outdoor Buddies Board of Directors and Pete was an Officer at Green Mill Sportsman’s Club. Rich passed away in July, 2015.

The club has carried on the tradition started by Pete and Rich and calls these events Rich Cori Memorial Sight-Ins.
